

FACTSHEET Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP)

What is TTIP?

- The Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) is the trading agreement under negotiation between the European Union and the United States. The official objective of TTIP is to boost transatlantic trade and investment, which is projected to drive growth and create jobs on both sides of the Atlantic.
- The agreement aims to remove trade barriers within a wide range of economic sectors and would consist of three main parts:
 - Market access (including tariffs)
 - Regulatory issues & Non-Tariff Barriers (NTBs)
 - Rules (e.g. intellectual property rights, customs and trade facilitation, trade and sustainable development).

In practice, as trade tariffs between partners are already quite low, negotiations will mainly focus on reducing regulatory barriers.

How do negotiations work?

- The European Commission formally appointed its negotiation team after the mandate was granted by the Council of the European Union in June 2013. Following heavy pressure by civil society for more transparency, the mandate itself was made public in October 2014.
- The Commission holds the leading role in negotiations, with the European Parliament and Council having a final say but without the right to alter the text.

Is there room for improvement?

- Despite the European Commission setting up an Advisory Group, in which BEUC Director General Monique Goyens participates, more engagement with citizens, for instance through public consultations, is key to guaranteeing a democratic process.
- Even though the Commission has taken important steps towards more transparency in the TTIP negotiations, it is essential that stakeholders are given a platform to provide input in order to flag potentially harmful provisions. Publication of the consolidated negotiating texts at key stages of the negotiations as well as the US proposals are critical requirements in order to fulfil people's right to a transparent policy making process.

What are the potential benefits of TTIP for consumers?

The European consumer could benefit from a TTIP agreement with:

- Lower prices and a wider variety of traded goods and services.
- The elimination of customs duties on goods personally imported from the US.
- A reduction of excessive pricing of transatlantic telecommunications.
- Common EU-US traceability and alert systems for products and better exchanges of information between regulatory agencies.

What are the potential risks of TTIP for consumers?

TTIP poses a number of risks to European consumers:

- Access to the European market of food that has not been produced according to European safety standards. The concept of food safety in the US is based on “reasonable certainty of no harm” and not on the “precautionary principle” like in the EU.
- Undermining data protection standards. In the EU, the rights to privacy and protection of personal data are fundamental – broad in scope and linked to strong sanctions. In the US, privacy is simply a matter of consumer protection in a very limited number of areas such as with children and the internet, health and financial services.
- Chemicals banned in the EU, but used in products and cosmetics in the US, might find their way onto European shelves.
- The introduction of an arbitration system, the Investor-State Dispute Settlement (ISDS), which would allow foreign companies to claim compensation from governments (i.e. taxpayers) if they believe government actions or regulations diminish the value of their investment.

BEUC asks for:

- Full transparency during the negotiation process including publication of texts at key stages and consultations with all stakeholders.
- No weakening of the levels of consumer, environment, labour, health and safety protections for citizens on both sides of the Atlantic.
- The Investor-State Dispute Settlement clause (ISDS) to be discarded from the agreement.

BEUC and TTIP

BEUC is supportive of free trade in principle if it results in expanding consumer choice, making services and goods more accessible and less expensive for citizens. Nevertheless, we have serious reservations regarding the proclaimed potential benefits, should they come at the expense of consumer, health, environmental, labour and safety standards in Europe.
